And he spoke to them at length in parables, saying:
“A sower went out to sow...Some seed fell among thorns, and the thorns grew up and choked it. But some seed fell on rich soil, and produced fruit, a hundred or sixty or thirtyfold. Whoever has ears ought to hear.”

— Mt 13:5, 7-9

15th Sunday in Ordinary Time

It's a little late in the season in most places to be planting seeds, although in a few weeks some folks will sow spinach and lettuce seeds for a fall crop. While we usually think of spring as planting time, there are some things that can be planted later in the year. Of course, if you're in the Imperial Valley of California, the planting goes on all year long. Nearly eighty percent of the winter vegetables consumed in the United States are grown in this one section of California. It is almost as if the sower and his seed found one place in the world that would always be fertile and produce fruit a hundred and sixty and thirtyfold.

While most of the parables in Matthew are recorded without any particular interpretation, the parable of the sower and the seed is laid out with a specific explanation. The seed is planted, but it is vulnerable. Anyone who has ever planted a garden knows how true this is. The newly planted seed can be subject to all sorts of hazards as it sprouts and grows. And Jesus uses that vulnerability as an example of what happens to the word of the kingdom in people's hearts: snatched by the evil one, lost to persecution, choked off by worldly cares.

For people who have been strong in the faith for much of their lives, it can be difficult to imagine the vulnerabilities of those who struggle with belief. They may be shaken by some tragedy, harmed by some church member, unsure about their acceptance of the tenets of the faith. The little growth of faith that exists must be nurtured and cared for. Like the Imperial Valley, which sees planting all year round, there is no one time for sowing the seeds of faith. Believers are called upon to continuously spread the word and promote the kingdom of God.
